China-like model may give e-comm exports a fillip, says EY

FE BUREAU New Delhi, July 18

INDIA SHOULD DEPLOY some of the learning from China's model for export promotion through e-commerce as it plans to give a filip to the fast-growing sector, a report, prepared by EY, in association with Assocham, said. India should have a framework for setting up e-commerce hubs and consider other relaxations in payment rules, it added.

The report recommends that the time limit for realisation of export proceeds should be liberalised. China puts no time limit realising payments against e-commerce exports while in India, Reserve Bank of India (RBI) guidelines mandate foreign exchange receipt within nine months of shipment, creating challenges for e-commerce operators, as some shipments are sold over 12 to 18 months, making the stipulated reconciliation time frame not feasible.

The report says time for payment realisation and repatriation for e-commerce exports should be increased to 18 months from 9 months. RBI has come out with draft export-import rules for public comments where easing of time frame for repatriation of export proceeds and enhanced variation in declared value of exports and actual realisation has been proposed.

US move may double India pharma contract manufacturing in 3 years

Biosecure Act to be introduced soon

MANU KAUSHIK New Delhi, July 18

THE INDIAN PHARMACEUTI-

CAL industry's contract manufacturing business is likely to double over the next three years as the US paves way for its Biosecure Act that aims to prohibit US federal government bodies from sourcing equipment and services from Chinese pharma companies.

"With the likely shift in manufacturing from China to India, the contract manufacturing segment will double in the next three years whereas the contract research segment is set to triple overthe same time," said head of a pharma industry association. Experts said that the introduction of Act by the US will further accelerate the growth of CDMOs (contract development and manufacturing organisations) and CROs (contract research organisations) in India. For instance, as per Mordor Intelligence, the contract manufacturing segment is estimated at $22.51 billion in 2024, and is expected to reach $44.63 billion by 2029, growing at a CAGR of 14.67%. Similarly, the CRO segment in India has been growing at a CAGR (compounded annual growth rate) of 10.75% and will reach $2.5 billion by 2030, as per the department of pharmaceuticals.

"CDMO segment is already well-developed in India, but this move will act as a big catalyst for the industry, and speed up the overall growth," said spokesperson at a major contract manufacturer.

At present, China's CDMO industry commands 8% global market share compared to India's 2.7%. Experts said that the Act presents a significant opportunity for the domestic pharma industry to dent China's share. Some reports suggest that Indian companies are already getting increased inquiries from US companies with over 60% of Indian pharma firms reporting a rise in new business interest.

However, some experts said the Act does not guarantee a windfall for the local players as countries like Ireland and Singapore can give tough competition."While there are about 120 drug projects in the US that are undervarious stages of development that could be hit due to past Chinese involvement; transitioning these complex collaborations takes time. The grandfathering clause in the Act, which allows existing contracts with China to continue until 2032, provides some preparation time but delays immediate financial gains," said Mohan Ramaswamy, co-founder and CEO of Rubix Data Sciences.

Nevertheless, the Indian companies have their own advantages. For instance, major CDMOs like Cipla and Syngene are cost-effective and have a skilled workforce. Plus, the Indian government has been offering grants and loans to boost the sector. "Overall, the Biosecure Act could be a potential game-changer for the Indian CDMO space, but it demands significant investment in infrastructure and talent to handle the influx of projects," said Ramaswamy.

INDIA'S IMPORT OF liquified

natural gas in June rose by 11% to 2,648 mscm (million standard cubic meter) as the country's consumption of gas increased by 7% primarily due to the rising demand for power and increased utilisation of gas based power capacities, data from the Petroleum Planning and Analysis Cell showed. In June 2020, the Directorate General of Foreign Trade (DGFT) restricted imports of certain new pneumatic tires for motor cars, buses, lorries, and motorcycles to promote domestic manufacturing. Importers must now apply for an import licence or permission from DGFT to import these tyres.

The imports were temporarily permitted by the department for promotion of industry and internal trade in return for investment commitments.

SANDIP DAS New Delhi, July 18

MALAYSIA ON THURSDAY requested India to lift restrictions on exports of commodities such as rice and sugar, Datuk Seri Johari Abdul Ghani, minister for plantation and commodities, said. "India's restrictions on shipments of farm commodities are bad for Malaysia," Ghani said on the sidelines of an event organised by the Indian Vegetable Oil Producers' Association.

Last year, India, the world's biggest exporter of rice and onions and the second-biggest exporter of sugar, had imposed restrictions on shipment of these commodities to keep domestic prices under check.

Malaysia seeks easing of export curbs

Ghani furthet said that "both countries have good relations and they are looking at putting a system in place to ensure smooth trade of essential items, particularly foodgrains and related commodities, even when there are export restrictions,". He stated that close to 25%

of Malaysians prefer to consume basmati rice.

Ghani also met agriculture minister Shivraj Singh Chauhan, offered the country's support in research and development, seed supply and management expertise to India in its oil palm mission.

"Malaysia stands ready to provide invaluable support, encouraging the growth of oil palm cultivation. India's importance to Malaysia's oil palm sector cannot be understated," Ghani stated.

VIVEK GUPTA

INDIA IS A capital-controlled economy. And one of the ways this capital control has impacted stakeholder value creation is that for any entity's shares to be listed on an Indian stock exchange, the law requires that the entity must be incorporated in India. This restriction has singularly caused the phenomenon of the "reverse flip" — where many India-dominant/ India-facing businesses return to India and become India-domiciled.

This recent trend has had a chequered history. Back in the day, from the early 2000s to very recently, Indian businesses and investors had a diametrically opposite view and looked to the West for potential stock market exits. NASDAO was seen as the go-to exchange for new-age businesses – as it was widely believed that such markets had the depth of trading, the critical mass of financial investors and global benchmarks, to be able to better appreciate value. Accordingly, most start-ups and VCled businesses would choose to "externalize" or "flip" – in simple terms, even as the business carried on operations in India, the business would be ultimately owned by a foreign parent. This "externalized" structure came to be adopted by most Indian new-age businesses – ranging regulatory interface. Some of these businesses may require central bank or other approvals. Likewise, any Chinese shareholding in any of these companies may need governmental approvals for migration. Typically, in most of these entities, sophisticated global financial sponsors would hold significant stakes. Each of them would need to closely consider impact of this movement on their investments - including on potential taxability for fund LPs, depending on the existing attributes of the structure.

The fourth issue to consider is that any migration would effectively mean that the option of listing overseas is closed. The naysayers, even if in a minority, do make the point that markets are dynamic and following the herd may not optimise results for every company.

Last, but not least, investors, founders and management must carefully align benchmark value indicated in the process of this migration, to an ultimate listing or the next financing round.

Interestingly, even as there have been calls by investors and companies to look at potentially making this transition easier, through regulatory and tax deferrals, the government has till now maintained a clear stand - that they welcome businesses and corporates returning to India and taking the benefit of the listing opportunity – but that all of this must be done in compliance with existing tax laws and regulations. As such, there is no special dispensation for such migrations of value. That said, unless India comes up with a simpler dual listing framework or allows IFSC to be used more meaningfully for access to local markets, the reverse flip phenomenon, with all its planning and careful consideration, is here to stay! And in the long run, commercially, all stakeholders gain founders and investors get better value creation, Indian investors enjoy access to quality companies and the Indian financial markets become

FE BUREAU New Delhi, July 18

INDIA SHOULD DEPLOY some of the learning from China's model for export promotion through e-commerce as it plans to give a filip to the fast-growing sector, a report, prepared by EY, in association with Assocham, said. India should have a framework for setting up e-commerce hubs and consider other relaxations in payment rules, it added.

The report recommends that the time limit for realisation of export proceeds should be liberalised. China puts no time limit realising payments against e-commerce exports while in India, Reserve Bank of India (RBI) guidelines mandate foreign exchange receipt within nine months of shipment, creating challenges for e-commerce operators, as some shipments are sold over 12 to 18 months, making the stipulated reconciliation time frame not feasible.

The report says time for triation for e-commerce exports should be increased to export-import rules for public time frame for repatriation of export proceeds and enhanced variation in declared value of exports and actual realisation has been proposed.

At present, China's CDMO industry commands 8% global market share compared to India's 2.7%. However, some experts said the Act does not guarantee a windfall for the local players as countries like Ireland and Singapore can give tough competition."While there are about 120

drug projects in the US that are undervarious stages of development that could be hit due to past Chinese involvement; transitioning these complex collaborations takes time. The grandfathering clause in the Act, which allows existing contracts with China to continue until 2032, provides some preparation time but delays immediate financial gains," said Mohan Ramaswamy, co-founder and CEO of Rubix Data Sciences.

Nevertheless, the Indian companies have their own advantages. For instance, major CDMOs like Cipla and Syngene are cost-effective and have a skilled workforce. Plus, the Indian government has been offering grants and loans to boost the sector. "Overall, the Biosecure Act could be a potential game-changer for the Indian CDMO space, but it demands significant investment in infrastructure and talent to handle the influx of projects," said Ramaswamy.

INDIA'S IMPORT OF liquified natural gas in June rose by 11% to 2,648 mscm (million standard cubic meter) as the country's consumption of gas increased by 7% primarily due to the rising demand for power and increased utilisation of gas based power capacities, data from the Petroleum Planning and Analysis Cell showed. MALAYSIA ON THURSDAY requested India to lift restrictions on exports of commodities such as rice and sugar, Datuk Seri Johari Abdul Ghani, minister for plantation and commodities, said. "India's restrictions on shipments of farm commodities are bad for Malaysia," Ghani said on the sidelines of an event organised by the Indian Vegetable Oil Producers' Association.

Last year, India, the world's biggest exporter of rice and onions and the second-biggest exporter of sugar, had imposed restrictions on shipment of these commodities to keep domestic prices under check.

Malaysia seeks easing of export curbs

Ghani furthet said that "both countries have good relations and they are looking at putting a system in place to ensure smooth trade of essential items, particularly foodgrains and related commodities, even when there are export restrictions,". He stated that close to 25%

of Malaysians prefer to consume basmati rice.

Ghani also met agriculture minister Shivraj Singh Chauhan, offered the country's support in research and development, seed supply and management expertise to India in its oil palm mission.

"Malaysia stands ready to provide invaluable support, encouraging the growth of oil palm cultivation. India's importance to Malaysia's oil palm sector cannot be understated," Ghani stated.

INDIA IS A capital-controlled economy. And one of the ways this capital control has impacted stakeholder value creation is that for any entity's shares to be listed on an Indian stock exchange, the law requires that the entity must be incorporated in India. This restriction has singularly caused the phenomenon of the "reverse flip" — where many India-dominant/ India-facing businesses return to India and become India-domiciled.

This recent trend has had a chequered history. Back in the day, from the early 2000s to very recently, Indian businesses and investors had a diametrically opposite view and looked to the West for potential stock market exits. NASDAO was seen as the go-to exchange for new-age businesses – as it was widely believed that such markets had the depth of trading, the critical mass of financial investors and global benchmarks, to be able to better appreciate value. Accordingly, most start-ups and VCled businesses would choose to "externalize" or "flip" – in simple terms, even as the business carried on operations in India, the business would be ultimately owned by a foreign parent. This "externalized" structure came to be adopted by most Indian new-age businesses – ranging from giants in the e-commerce space to fintechs to software and other tech trend has reversed – where entities who had earlier "flipped" now actually want to "flip back" into the country. In other words, if the value was earlier held by an entity incorporated outside India, that value now needs to be held by an India-incorporated entity. The commercial rationale for this is clear – India is seen as the highest growth market in the world, which in turn has caused some of the most sophisticated financial investors to operate directly on Indian stock exchanges. Add to this — flows from the Indian domestic investors — and today, the Indian stock markets can provide value that these India-centric new-age businesses would not command overseas.

The process is not simple

While the rationale for the reverse flip is clear, the process itself is not that simple.

The most fundamental issue is around taxation. When significant value moves from a foreign holding to an India holding, there will always be tax friction. The potential gain could look to be taxed both by the foreign jurisdiction where the entity currently resides, as well as by India, since the core value is ultimately derived from India. This issue needs planning and careful resolution not just for the shareholders but also for the employees, who in most such companies, would hold significant stake through employee options. The second most important issue to plan for would be to consider the regulatory interface. Some of these businesses may require central bank or other approvals. Likewise, any Chinese shareholding in any of these companies may need governmental approvals for migration.

Each of them would need to closely consider impact of this movement on their investments - including on potential taxability for fund LPs, depending on the existing attributes of the structure.

The fourth issue to consider is that any migration would effectively mean that the option of listing overseas is closed. The naysayers, even if in a minority, do make the point that markets are dynamic and following the herd may not optimise results for every company.

Last, but not least, investors, founders and management must carefully align benchmark value indicated in the process of this migration, to an ultimate listing or the next financing round.

Interestingly, even as there have been calls by investors and companies to look at potentially making this transition easier, through regulatory and tax deferrals, the government has till now maintained a clear stand that they welcome businesses and corporates returning to India and taking the benefit of the listing opportunity – but that all of this must be done in compliance with existing tax laws and regulations. As such, there is no special dispensation for such migrations of value. That said, unless India comes up with a simpler dual listing framework or allows IFSC to be used more meaningfully for access to local markets, the reverse flip phenomenon, with all its planning and careful consideration, is here to stay! And in the long run, commercially, all stakeholders gain founders and investors get better value creation, Indian investors enjoy access to quality companies and the Indian financial markets become deeper and stronger.
